Library Consortium Provides Discounted Information Databases

One of the Community College League's fastest growing services is its Community College Library Consortium, a joint project with the Council of Chief Librarians.

The program provides informational databases via the internet to libraries at all 109 colleges and many off-campus centers around the state. The program negotiates significant price discounts on more than 100 different databases covering nearly every discipline in a college's curriculum for purchase by the library. The databases are used by students doing class projects and by faculty for research and class preparation.

The Community College Library Consortium's Web site at www.cclibraries.org provides college librarians with information about all available consortium services as well as reviews on databases, information on how to order and renew subscriptions, usage statistics, and license agreements.
